THE DOUGLAS FAMILY

The John Douglas Family of Mississippi is descended from the Scottish family of Douglas—described by historians as the most powerful and widely celebrated family that Scotland ever produced.

Many legends of the origin of the family are found, but the first recorded is William of Douglas, the name being derived from the wild pastoral dale he possessed on the small river Douglas in Lanarkshire-Gael. Duf-glas or Duglas, meaning dark grey, came from the color of the waters. William of Douglas appears as a witness to Charters by the King and the Bishop of Glasgow between 1175 and 1213. He had six sons of whom Archibald or Erkenbald was his heir, and Brice rose to be Bishop of Moray. Sir William Douglas, apparently the son of Sir Archibald Douglas, figures in records from 1240 to 1273, and was the father of another Sir William, distinguished in family traditions as William the Hardy, who had three sons (1) The good Sir James, (2) Hugh and (3) Archibald. The Douglases had since the time of William the Hardy held the title of Lords of Douglas; but in 1357 Sir William, who had fought at Portiers, was made Earl of Douglas and by marriage became the Earl of Mar. The family rose in power under King Robert Bruce, of whom the good Lord James of Douglas was the most distinguished adherent, but suffered partial eclipse when the ninth Earl James rebelled against King James II. The Earl of Angus, however, restored the ancestral glory of the house which has continued to be one of the most important in Scotland.

The good Sir James of Douglas is known as the greatest Captain of Bruce in the long war of independence. "The Black Knight," as he was called, was victor in fifty-seven fights, his name being a terror to the border country. When his sovereign Robert Bruce, lay dying he told his knights of a longing he had always had to make a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, and begged Sir James Douglas as his most trusted and best beloved Knight to carry his embalmed heart to Jerusalem and bury it under holy soil. Sir James gave his promise upon his knighthood. Receiving the heart carefully embalmed and laid in a silver case, Sir James with a long train of Scotland's most gallant knights set forth on the long pilgrimage to Palestine. While on his way to Jerusalem he was killed fighting against the Moors in Spain, and the silver casket containing the heart of Bruce was brought back with the body of Douglas and buried in the Monastery of Melrose. Remembering the gallant death, the Douglases have ever since that time worn a bloody heart bearing a crown upon it. The original arms of the family were simply "three silver stars on a blue field" is not known. Following are the armorial bearings of the family most generally seen and worn:

Arms—Argent, a man's heart gules ensigned with an imperial crown proper:
on a chief azure three stars of the first.

Inscription on Coat of Arms:

Amais Arriara—"Always in front," or "Never behind."

PREFACE

Some years ago the author began to collect information on the Mississippi branch of the Douglas family to which he belongs. Little did we realize the amount of time and work that would be involved. There were no vital statistics kept in the early days and information had to be gathered where it could be found. We have had access to records in family Bibles of every generation since that of John Douglas, Sr., who was the first of our family to come to Mississippi. We have gone into the homes of many, many members of our family getting information and establishing family lines. Much time has been spent in many cemeteries getting data as to the birth and death of the older members of the family. Countless hours have been spent searching courthouse records on marriages, deeds, wills, and other data which would give light on the family. Several trips have been made to Georgia and North Carolina with days of research in the Archives of History in Atlanta, Georgia, in the Hall of History in Raleigh, North Carolina, and in the Courthouse records of Lincoln, Orange, Rowan and Surry Counties of North Carolina. One trip was made to Du Quoin, Illinois to establish a point in the Military record of John Douglas. Likewise, much time was spent in the Archives of History of Mississippi, in the Courthouse records of Copiah, Lawrence, and Yazoo Counties of Mississippi. The data represented in this work is based on this material, and it is hoped that the errors are at a minimum.

We have not used (and we want to emphasize this) any guess work or conclusions in the formation of this work. If a definite line could not be established, it was omitted. This was a disappointment, for many families have been omitted which we would liked to have included. One of the sad things about a work of this kind is that all we know of a person's long and useful life is a date, a sentence, or perhaps just the name. Some have served with such distinction that they deserve a great deal more than this work permits.

We are deeply indebted to the following for information and help they were able to give us in this work: my father, George T. Douglas, who was the oldest living member of the family at the beginning of this research; John Alexander Douglas of West Monroe, Louisiana, the only living grandson of the original John Douglas; Robert Judson Douglas of Sontag, Mississippi; Mrs. James B. Hutchinson of Hazlehurst, Mississippi, who has done quite a bit of research on the family; Dr. J. E. Hodges of Maiden, North Carolina, historian of the William Douglas clan of North Carolina, who made available his records for our use and gave us many valuable leads in our research there; Mrs. Nellie Hill Womack of Du Quoin, Illinois, who gave us access to the records of her branch of the Douglas family. We want to express our appreciation to Dr. Louis E. Dollarhide of the English Department and Dr. Jack W. Gunn of the History Department of Mississippi College, who read the manuscript and gave us valuable suggestions.

This work has been done in order that the best record possible of our family might be preserved for future generations. It is hoped that all our kinsmen may become more familiar with our family background, and that we may come to know each other better. If this work is of some value to any member of the family, now or in the future, the author will be repaid for what he has attempted to do.

INTRODUCTION

In a conversation with my father several years ago concerning our connection with some members of our family, we remarked, "Someone should write a record of the family while some of the older ones are still living."

My father replied, "Why don't you do it?"

This work is the result of that conversation. We make no claim to being a genealogist, historian, or writer. In the spare time of the busy life of a college professor, we have attempted to compile as accurately as possible what information we were able to gather of the family of John and Nancy Douglas, who were the first of our line in Mississippi. This is not a genealogy in that we have made no effort to trace the lineage of the family beyond John Douglas nor tie it into other branches of the Douglas family. (It was quite by accident that we discovered the connection with the William Douglas Family in North Carolina). This is not a history of the family, for we do not have available enough information to write a complete history. This is simply a listing of the descendants by families of John and Nancy Douglas with what brief information we have of each of them. In order that you may know something of the background of the family, we have given, in four brief chapters, what historical material we have been able to gather. Chapter One is condensed from volumes that have been written about Scotland and the Douglas families' relationship to it. The other three chapters are the result of our research.

As stated above, we have made no effort to trace the lineage beyond John Douglas; however, we know we belong to the vast Douglas family living for centuries in southern Scotland. Since no one kept a record of the families in the early days, there are many lines in the United States, the connection of which we do not know. We have discovered seven separate lines in Mississippi. Most of them arrived here about the same time, but as far as we know, have no close connection with each other.

We find that there are several traditions held by various members of our family as to our forefathers John Douglas. We have traced each of these traditions and, on the basis of facts as to dates and recorded records, have arrived at what we believe is authentic. One tradition holds that John Douglas came to Mississippi from Tennessee. (We held to this tradition until research proved it untrue). There was a John Douglas who went from Surry County, North Carolina to Tennessee on a military land grant in 1796, as described in Chapter Two. However, this John Douglas died in Tennessee. The fact that John Douglas lived for three years on Lookout Mountain in Tennessee, as described in Chapter Three, perhaps added to this tradition. There is another tradition that John Douglas was a Georgian by birth. There was a John Douglas in Georgia about this time. We find many records of land transfers of John Douglas and his father David Douglas. We had to do a lot of research here because of the coincidence of the names. As noted in Chapter Two, John Douglas of Lincoln County, North Carolina, was in possession in 1801 of land owned by David Douglas. However, the dates do not coincide even though the names are the same. The David and John Douglas family of Georgia came to Georgia with Oglethrope and were never in North Carolina. This John Douglas died in Georgia. The third tradition holds that John Douglas was born in North Carolina and lost his wife by death on the journey to Mississippi. He married Mrs. Nancy Walden Denman in Georgia shortly after the death of his first wife. His first son, Ransom, by his second marriage was born in Franklin County, Georgia, and he came to Mississippi with a colony from Georgia. This is perhaps responsible for the tradition that he was a Georgian by birth. However, Foster, in his book, Mississippi Baptist Preachers, states that John Douglas, the father of Elisha Douglas, was born in North Carolina. This we believe to be authentic.

In our family, as in all branches of the Douglas family, there is a difference of opinion as to the spelling of our name. There have been those in every generation who spell their name "Douglass," using two s's, while most of the families spell it "Douglas." The first record we have of our name was William of Douglas, the name being derived from the wild pastoral dale he possessed on the small river Douglas. Having its source in a mossy glen, the river got its name from the color of the water which was dark grey. The two Scotch words for dark grey were Duf-glas or Du-glas. The river was called the dark grey or Du-glas river; later, it was changed to Douglas River. William, who lived on this river was called William of Douglas. For centuries all of the family spelled their name "Douglas." Later, we do not know when, some members of the family added an extra "s". We find that one clan of the family living in the highlands (most of the Douglass family lived in the lowlands of Scotland) among the McDonalds, McDugals, McIntosh and other highland clans added a "Mc" to their name and became the McDouglas family. We have found a few of them in the United States. In all the records in North Carolina, including his military record, John Douglas spelled his name with only one "s" as did all the family living in North Carolina. Somewhere along the line the extra "s" was added. All the sons of John Douglas used the two "s's" in the early days, but today most of the family go back to the original spelling using only one "s"—"Douglas". The members of the Ransom Douglass family still use the two "s's"—"Douglass."

There is also a difference of opinion as to the Crest, the Coat of Arms and Tartan of the family. In the days of Heraldry, in Scotland and England, each family had its own Coat of Arms, its own colors or Tartan, sometimes called the plaid, and each family had its own battle cry, originally used perhaps for recognition in battle. Thus, the Coat of Arms, the Tartan, and the battle cry became a part, and the pride of the family. In the Peerage of Scotland we find that the original Arms of the Douglas family were simply three silver stars on a blue field. Later, as the different Douglas families developed, we find a number of Tartans and Coats of Arms. The Lords of Douglas, the Earl of Douglas, the Earl of Mar, the Earl of Angus and other families of the Douglas Clan each had a separate Coat of Arms and Tartan.

The Imperial Crown was added by some families and, following the death of Robert Bruce, a bleeding heart was added. The Coat of Arms of the family most generally seen and worn today are the three stars in a field of blue with the Imperial Crown and the bleeding heart. The battle cry most generally used by the Douglas family was "A Douglas! A Douglas!" They would shout this as they went into battle, and some historians state that under the leadership of Sir James, known as the "Black Douglas," this cry struck terror in the hearts of the enemy.

In this work, as stated above, we are simply listing the descendants of John Douglas and have followed the bloodline only. We have given, as far as possible, the name of the husband or wife. Except in a few cases, we do not have the date of the birth of the spouse, and we have made no effort to trace the family of the in-laws. It is simply a listing of the Douglas family. The names appearing in the index are all descendants of John and Nancy Douglas. None of the husbands or wives of members of the family are listed. In many works of this kind the index gives only the page on which the record of this individual appears, and the reader must search through many names to find the proper listing. In this work, each member of the family is given a number and this number is listed in the index. Hence, the name is more easily located. There are a few instances where there may be confusion, as when more than one person with the same name is listed, but these are few. We wish we could have given the date of birth of each individual and the date of death of the deceased, but in many of the families we were not able to secure this information. We found it much more difficult to secure the date of death than the date of birth of the member of the family. Thus, you will see that the dates of death are few as compared to the dates of birth.

In some works of this type the families are listed by generations, especially if one is working on a family tree. This can be done with a small family easier and with less confusion than with a large family. We have not done this but have taken the families of each of the four sons of John and Nancy Douglas and followed through the generations of this family. The following legend is used in listing the generations:

- I. First generation
 - 1. Second generation
 - A. Third generation
 - a. Four generation
 - (a) Fifth generation
 - aa. Sixth generation
 - (aa) Seventh generation

There are certain distinct characteristics of the Douglas family that have held true through the six generations that they have lived in Mississippi. In the early days of the family history in North Carolina and in Mississippi, we note the number of Bible names their children. David, Solomon, Isaac and other Old Testament names were common in each generation. John and Nancy Douglas gave four of their five sons Old Testament names, as follows: Joel, Jephthah, Elijah and Elisha. There seems to have been instilled into the children of each family a love and respect for the Bible and the Church that has lived through six generations. Our family has been a church-related people. In the research for this work the author has met hundreds of members of our family, many of whom he had not known before, and has found that the great majority of them are vitally connected with and actively engaged in the work of the church. There have been many ministers among them, and large numbers have been deacons and leaders in every phase of the church work. They have been a simple and God-fearing people.

Another characteristic of the family, which we believe grew out of the above, is that they, as a whole, have been a law abiding people. We do not know the lives of every member of the family for six generations, but in our research we have discovered where they lived and something of their lives. To the best of our knowledge there have been no criminals among them. We have not discovered a single record of a descendant of John and Nancy Douglas being convicted of a crime and punished by execution or sentenced to a penal institution. This is a record for which we can justly be proud.

A final characteristic of the family is that they have not only been law abiding citizens, but they have been vitally interested in the affairs of their country and have taken their citizenship seriously. Although few of them have gone into politics, most of them have had strong convictions on good government and have consistently exercised their right to vote for those they believe would maintain the highest principles in government.

CHAPTER I

EUROPEAN BACKGROUND

The people of Scotland, from whom the Douglas family came, are made up of two distinct branches of the great Aryan family, the Celtic and the Teutonic. The Celts were the first comers, and were in possession when the country became historically known, that is, at the first invasion of the Romans. In later times there were three Celtic peoples in Britain, the Picts, the Scots and the Welsh. The Picts were those Celts who lived in then the northernmost part of Britain, while the Welsh lived in the southern part. The Scots, the other Gaelic people were, when we first heard of them, settled in Ireland. They later migrated to the western part of Britain, now Scotland. The Scots and Picts were friends and allies, and are early mentioned as fighting together against the Romans. After a time the name Scots became common to all the Celts living north of the Firth of Alba, and from then the whole country was called Scotland.

The Picts were a wild pagan people, but the Scots had already become Christianized before coming to their adopted country. They brought their new faith and through them it spread among the Picts and also among the English or Northumberland. Columba was the great Apostle of the Scots and undertook the conversion of the Picts.

The Northmen, or Norsemen, a heathen people of Teutonic blood, inhabited Norway, Sweden, and Denmark, from the eighth century onward. They were a seagoing, farfaring people, and were a scourge to both the English and Scots, sweeping down the coasts, harassing the people, destroying their cities and making off with their possessions. At times they seized and settled upon large tracts of land. When Norway was formed by Harold Harfagra, many of the petty chiefs, with their followers, who were called Vikings, sought a new settlement elsewhere. A large part of the Lowlands of Scotland, along the seacoast, was seized and settled by the Norsemen, forcing the Picts and Scots back into the Highlands.

When William of Normandy invaded Britain, many of the Saxon barons or chiefs moved northward and settled in Scotland, rather than submit to William. These settled in the Lowlands and were welcomed by the Scots, who fought with them against the invasion of Scotland by the Normans.

Thus the Lowlands of Scotland became largely a Teutonic people while the Highlands remained Celtic. The Norsemen and Saxons in time became a part of the country and were also known as Scots. There was a gradual amalgamation of these two peoples until they became one, and the Teutonic people fought as fiercely for the independence of Scotland as did the original Celtic people. There was later a further amalgamation by the intermarriage of the Teutonic and Celtic people, especially on the borders between the Lowlands and the Highlands.

From such a people came the Douglas family. The records seem to show that they were more Teutonic than Celtic. The original home of the Douglas Clan, as far as the record goes, was in Lanarkshire, which is on the border between the Highlands and the Lowlands. Their vast holdings of land in later years were mostly in the Lowlands. Teutonic and Saxon names appear in the family throughout the generations far more than Celtic names. William and James were two of the most common names. Archibald or Erkenbald, as it was first called, was a common name, and is definitely Teutonic. However, there seems to be evidence that they were also Celtic. When Robert Stuart, nephew of Robert Bruce, became king, many thought that William Douglas would claim the throne, in that he had a prior claim as a descendant of William the Lion, one of the outstanding Celtic kings.

In his work, The Douglas Book, William Frasier says the Douglas family came to Scotland in 767 A. D. and that they were originally from Moravia. If this is true, this would put them in Scotland about the time of the invasion of the Norsemen. There is much difference of opinion among the historians as to the exact date of the arrival of many of the people who later made up the Scotch people. Whenever they arrived, they had become a part of Scotland when we first know them historically.

The earliest historical record we have is of a William of Douglas who lived in Lanarkshire-Gael. He appears as witness to charters many times between 1175 and 1213 A. D. He had six sons, of whom Archibald or Erkenbald was his heir. One of his sons, Brice, became Bishop of Moray. Sir William Douglas, the son of Archibald, is mentioned many times in the records between 1240 and 1273. He was the father of Sir William Douglas, known as William the Hardy. This Sir William joined Wallace in the first fight against England for the independence of Scotland. William the Hardy had three sons, the good Sir James, Hugh, and Archibald. James and his brother Archibald, were to play an important part in the history of Scotland in the years to come. From them came the two powerful families, the "Black Douglasses" and the "Red Douglasses." The name Archibald appears in both lines through the generations.

In 1296, Edward I of England attempted to crush Scotland and make it one with England. The Celts of the highlands offered little resistance but it roused a spirit of defiance and opposition among the lowlanders. This feeling of discontent ripened into rebellion, which was led by William Wallace. Wallace was joined by William of Douglas (William the Hardy), a renowned soldier, and Robert Bruce. At the battle of Stirling, September 11, 1297, these Scottish leaders met and defeated a greatly superior English army. However, in 1298, Edward led the English to crush the Scotch completely. All the leaders except Wallace were left unharmed. He was tried for treason and executed.

Edward then set to work to complete the union of England and Scotland. But the great difficulty in dealing with the Scots was that they never knew when they were conquered, and just when Edward hoped his scheme for union was carried out, they rose to arms once more.

The leader this time was Robert Bruce. He had joined Wallace and William Douglas in the earlier rebellion. Again it was the peoples of the lowlands who joined Bruce, among them James Douglas, son of William, of whom Shearer, in his history of Scotland, says was the most famous of them all. In the Battle of Stirling of June 24, 1314, the small band of Scots defeated an English army of 100,000 men. Bruce divided his army into four (4) divisions. Their leaders were James Douglas, Randolph, his nephew, James Steward, and Bruce's own brother Edward. This James Douglas, who fought with Bruce, was known as the "good Sir James" signifying that he must have been a good, honorable man, as well as one of the greatest warriors Scotland ever produced. He was tall and strong, and his dark skin and black hair won him the name of the "Black Douglas." The English hated and feared him but his own people loved him well and remembered him long after his death. From this time on, the descendants of James were known as the "Black Douglases." To the south, there arose another powerful branch of the family known as the "Red Douglases," descended from Archibald Douglas, who had red hair and ruddy skin. The head of the Black Douglas Clan bore the title "Earl of Douglas," while the Red Douglas title was "Earl of Angus." When King Robert Bruce went to Ireland in 1316, he appointed Walter Stuart, the High Steward, and Sir James Douglas, Governor in his absence.

Sir James Douglas, who fought with Bruce, was killed in Spain fighting against the Moors while on a Crusade to the Holy Land. In carrying out his promise to the dying Bruce to take his heart and bury it in the Holy Land, he gathered a large force of Scotland's bravest knights and began the Crusade. When they arrived in Spain, the King of Spain was engaged in a War to drive the Moors, a Moslem people, who had crossed over from North Africa, out of Spain. He persuaded Douglas to join him, saying that as much could be accomplished for the cause of Christianity in driving the Moors out of Europe, as by his Crusade to the Holy Land. In the Battle, which the Moors were winning, Douglas was mortally wounded. With his last strength, he took the silver case which contained the embalmed heart of Bruce and threw it into the midst of the Moors, shouting his last words, "The heart of Bruce, your King, follow it." This turned the tide of the battle. The Scottish knights, to rescue the heart of Bruce, charged the Moors with almost super human force and drove them from the field. The heart of Bruce, along with the body of James Douglas was carried back to Scotland and buried. His son William succeeded him as leader of the Douglas Clan.

At the death of Robert Bruce, his son David succeeded him as King. David died leaving no heir, and his nephew, Robert Stuart, ascended to the throne. He was the son of Marjory, the daughter of Robert Bruce, who had married Walter Stuart. Robert II was the first of the long line of Stuarts who were to rule Scotland for the next two hundred years. However, he did not ascend the throne without opposition. Many thought that William, Lord of Douglas, would claim the throne. He was a descendant of Margaret, wife of Alan of Galloway, the oldest daughter of David Earl of Huntington. David was the brother of William the Lion, who had the longest reign of any of the Celtic kings. Robert Bruce had claimed the throne as a descendant of the second daughter of the earl of Huntington. William Douglas had inherited Galloway, and this, with his other great estates on the border, made him a formidable contender. Had he claimed the throne, he would most likely have been chosen instead of Robert Stuart. Douglas had a stronger personality, could put a stronger military force in the field, and the Douglas Clan was still enjoying the popular favor won by the good Sir James. He did not claim the throne, however, and Robert II became king, and the house of Stuart, instead of the house of Douglas, ruled Scotland for two centuries. The daughter of Robert II later married the son of William Douglas.

When James II came to the throne, Archibald, earl of Douglas, was the most powerful baron of Scotland. Besides holding Galloway, Annondale, and other great estates in Scotland, he had inherited the Duchy of Touraine, which had been conferred upon his father by the King of France in the War with England, and in his foreign Duchy possessed wealth and splendor beyond anything the Scottish king could boast. At the death of Archibald, his son William, who was seventeen years of age, succeeded him as earl of Douglas. He kept up a state and retinue almost royal. The king was jealous of and feared the power of the Douglas family. Two of the king's most faithful men, Chrichton and Livingstone, agreed to bring about the downfall of William Douglas. He and his brother David were invited to visit the King in Edinburg. They came, were seized, and after a form of trial were beheaded in the castle yard. The power of their house was broken for a time. Their estates were divided. Part went to their uncle James, the male heir while Galloway went to their sister, Margaret. However, on the death of James, his son, William, married his cousin Margaret, and the power of the family was restored.

William Douglas became more powerful by the year. He was already Lord of nearly all the southern country, and he began to join in hand with the great chiefs of the north. His revenue and retainers equalled that of the King. One thousand horsemen were his ordinary train, and he attended the King's wedding with five times that number. His courts on the borders were almost Parliaments. The King suspected him of making plans to overthrow the government and feeling a crisis had come, invited William Douglas to the Royal Palace at Stirling, and received him in a friendly way. The King urged Douglas to break off his bonds with the other powerful chiefs. Douglas refused, whereupon, he was stabbed by the King and killed by one of his attendants.

James Douglas, ninth Earl, and brother of William, defied the King as a traitor. He came to Stirling and burnt a great part of the town. The King felt he was too weak to attack Douglas openly, and thus began to pull down the House of Douglas by building up others. The Earl of Angus, the head of the "Red Douglasses" was used, with others to overthrow the "Black Douglasses." The question of whether James Stuart or James Douglas should wear the crown was settled by a Battle at Arkinholm in Eskdale in 1454. Hoping to gain by his downfall Douglas was forsaken by many of his followers, was defeated, and fled to England. An Act of forfeiture was passed against him and all his house. His holding were divided, the Earl of Angus, or the "Red Douglases" receiving a large part. Many other families, among them, the Hamiltons rose from the ruins of the Black Douglases.

The "Red Douglases" now became almost as powerful in the affairs of Scotland as had the "Black Douglases." James IV married Margaret Tudor, sister of Henry VIII of England. However, the strife with England continued and when England and France declared war, James decided to invade England. He refused to take the advice of the Earl of Douglas and other leaders, who knew much more of border fighting than he did. As a result, the Scots were defeated at the Battle of Flodden, September 9, 1515, and the King was killed. The estates met at Perth, and the Queen mother was appointed Regent for King James V, who was only two years old. However, within a year, the Queen married young Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, and the Estates transferred the Regency to the Duke of Albany. The Queen refused to give up her son, but was forced to surrender. Her husband fled to France, and she to her brother's court in England where she was joined by her husband, Archibald Douglas. She bore a daughter, Margaret Douglas, afterwards Lady Lennox, Danley's mother.

At the age of 12, James V was set up to rule and took his place at the head of Parliament, August, 1524. At the age of 14, the King was considered old enough to choose his own guardians. He chose the Earls of Erroll, Argyle, and Angus, and an agreement was made that each in succession was to have the care of the King for three months. The Earl of Angus' turn came first, but at the end of three months, he refused to give up his charge, and for two years ruled over both the King and his subjects, successfully resisting all attempts at a rescue.

In 1528, the King made his escape, riding by night, disguised as a groom from Falkland, the Douglas Castle, to Stirling. Now that he was safely out of the hands of the Douglases, he set about to crush them utterly. An act of forfeiture was passed against them. The Earl of Angus had many adherents, but as had been truth with the "Black Douglases," hoping for a share of his lands, they took sides with the King. They proved too strong for him, and he was forced to take refuge in England. All the lands of the Douglas family were divided among the leaders who allied themselves with the King. An act was passed that made it treason for anyone by the name of Douglas to come within six miles of the King. Thus the overthrow of the "Red Douglases" by James V was as thorough as had been that of the "Black Douglases" by James III, on whose ruin they had risen. The Douglas family was never able to rise to power again in Scotland.

The Church history, in Scotland, was not as well preserved as was secular history, and thus the Douglas family is better known for its relationship to the State. However, there appears here and there records showing that they were also actively engaged in the work of the church. The first Douglas of which we have a record had a son Brice who was a minister, and rose to the place of Bishop of Moray.

Gavin Douglas, third son of Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, known in Scottish history as "Bell the Cat," was both a priest and a poet. He studied at the University of St. Andrew, where his name appears in the list of alumni between 1489 and 1491. Shortly after his graduation he was appointed Rector of Hauch, the Parson of Linton in Lothian. In 1501 he was elected Dean of Provast of the Collegiate Church of St. Giles in Edinburg, an office of dignity and emolument. Later, he was consecrated Bishop of Dunkeld. He died of the Plague in London in his forty-eighth year. His works as a poet are not numerous but important. Among them are: (1) "The Palice of Honoui," written in 1501. It shows much originality of treatment, (2) "King Hart," or the heart of man, descriptive of the progress of life from youth to old age, (3) A short poem called "Conscience" and (4) "A Translation of the Aeneid of Virgil," with a supplemental book of "Maphaeus Vegius." This "Translation of Virgil," by which he is best known, is a work of which Scotland will always be proud, as it was the first metrical translation of a classical author made in Britain. Written in the broad and widely spread dialect common at an early period in the north of England and Scotland, it will always be one of the most important landmarks on Scottish philology.

The leading figure in the Reformation in Scotland was John Knox. Archbishop Hamilton sought to crush the rising movement against the Catholic Church. Many leaders, Knox among them, were forced to flee the country. Many were fined, imprisoned, and a large number of protestant ministers were put to death. Walter Myln, a parish priest of Lunan near Melrose, an old man of 82, was burned at the stake on April 8, 1558. John Douglas, formerly a Dominican Priest, now Chaplain of Argile continued to preach at Castle Campbell in spite of the remonstace of Archbishop Hamilton. He would have been put to death but for the protection of the Earl of Argyle, who was strong enough to defy the Archbishop.

The Scots who settled in Ulster Ireland in the seventeenth century were protestant and mostly Presbyterian. They had to combat constantly the established church of Ireland, which was Catholic, Sir Robert Douglass in his Peerage of Scotland lists Rev. William Douglas, a Presbyterian Minister, as one of the leaders in the conflict between these two religious bodies.

At the death of Queen Elizabeth, James VI of Scotland was the nearest heir to the throne of England by right of descent from Margaret, elder daughter of Henry VII. Parliament confirmed his right to the throne, and on May 6, 1603, James VI of Scotland became James I of England and Scotland. Now the two countries were combined under one government for the first time.

Earlier, during the reign of Edward VI a system of keeping under control the rebellious Irish chiefs was introduced. The entire estate of the troublesome chief was confiscated, and the tribesmen, who were considered his tenants, were turned out to their farms and homes. The whole land of the tribe was given to an "undertaker," who received it on condition that he should bring over a certain number of English colonists and plant them on the confiscated land. Hence, the name Plantation.

Two of the most powerful and troublesome Irish chiefs at the time James

I came to the throne were Hugh O'Neill and Rory O'Donnell. Matters reached a climax in 1607, when a report was spread that these two chiefs were planning another rebellion. However, both were old and worn out with the fatigues of war and decided to leave Ireland rather than endure a new period of war and perils. They fled to the Continent, first to France and later to Rome. O'Donnell died in 1608 and O'Neill soon after.

King James I had long desired to establish further Plantations in Ireland. He accordingly took advantage of the flight of O'Neill and O'Donnell, and in 1608, confiscated the greater part of their land, which comprised six counties of Ulster, including some three-fourths of a million acres of fertile land. A large part of the land was distributed among English and Scotch "Undertakers" who were required to plant either English or Scotch Protestants. Thus the Plantation of Ulster began.

When the time of transplanting the population arrived, the hardy protestant settlers consisted mainly of Scotch Presbyterians and English Puritans. It has been estimated that by 1620, between 30,000 and 40,000 Scotch settlers had established themselves in the six counties of Londonderry, Donegal, Tyrone, Cavan, Armagh, and Fermanagh. The claim has been made that by 1641, approximately 100,000 Scotch and 20,000 English had reached Ulster.

With the downfall of the Douglass family in Scotland, their vast holdings of land were taken and given to other families, and they had to find a home elsewhere. Many of them went to Canada, which was being opened up for settlement. However, a larger number joined the migration to Ulster in Ireland. We have made no effort to trace the activities of the family in Ireland. However, Sir Robert Douglass in his Peerage of Scotland lists Rev. William Douglas, a Presbyterian, as being one of the outstanding religious leaders of Ulster. General George Douglas is listed as being in command of the English forces in the Battles of Boyne and Limerick in 1690.

During the first 100 years of this transformation of Northern Ireland, these settlers underwent a series of experiences that served to encourage the maintenance of unbroken racial entity, and the development of strong protestant organizations and communities. Since the Scots were almost entirely Presbyterians, they did not conform to the Established Church. The nonconformity of such a large group was regarded as a disturbance to the peace of the realm.

The Ulster province became almost wholly Scotch. They retained their language and customs of Scotland and did not intermarry with the Irish to any great extent. Wentworth declares that the Ulster Scots were the greatest obstacle to his plans of conformity and unity in Ireland. Being intruders, these Ulster Scots also found their safety endangered by the hostility of the native Irish.

The restrictions and persecutions that the English and Scotch Protestants had to undergo reached the peak in Ulster when Charles II formulated a policy of conformity. Punishment in the form of fines and imprisonment was meted out to those who conducted non-conformist services, absented themselves from services in the Parish Churches, or refused to take the Oath of Supremacy. In 1703, the Irish Parliament passed the Sacramental Test Measure. This act provided that all public officers of Ireland must take the sacrament according to the rites of the Established Church; and declared that marriages to be regular must be performed by ministers of the Established Church. Those who refused to conform were excluded from both civil and military offices and suffered persecution and arrest for not conforming.

Other factors, however, added to the plight of the Scots in Ireland. Since a large part of Ulster consisted of pasture lands, the settlers engaged in the raising of cattle, hogs, and sheep. The export of cattle from North Ireland reached such large proportions that the English landowners sought to curb this export trade. In 1665 and in 1680, laws were enacted by which the importing of cattle, sheep, and swine, or beef, pork, and mutton, as well as butter and cheese was forbidden. By the Navigation Acts of 1663 and 1670, the Irish producers were forbidden to engage in colonial trade. The resourceful Scots then turned to producing Woolen Goods, Linen and Hempen fabrics. In 1698 and 1705, the Irish Parliament imposed heavy restrictive duties on the export of Wollen, Linen, and Hempen goods from Ireland. Under such discouragements, a general commercial despondency set in among those engaged in the above mentioned pursuits, and preparation for departure from Ireland began.

Many of the Scots who settled in Ulster did so largely as tenants under lease. When the time for renewing the leases came, about 1717 and 1718, the Landlords placed a new burden upon the lease holders by doubling and trebling the rents. Many of the Scotch people, unwilling and unable to pay the increased rents, surrendered their holdings and began seeking a home elsewhere.

In addition to the above, there were a series of crop failures, the great frost of 1739, a three year drouth, and three of four famines between 1720 and 1750.

Under these conditions, the Scotch-Irish began to emigrate in large numbers from Ireland. This emigration reached such proportions that a proposal to restrict this movement was made by the Irish Parliament in 1735. Instead of putting a stop to emigration, it only increased the unrest and induced many more to make preparation for an early departure to America. The sailing records of the newspapers of Dublin, Belfast, Cork, Galway, and Waterford reveal that approximately 150,000 emigrants embarked for America between 1740 and 1770. Although some of these were native Irish, the greater part were Scotch Protestants who largely settled in Pennsylvania.

CHAPTER II

EARLY COLONIAL DAYS

The Douglas family, along with many others of original Scotch blood, have been referred to as Scotch-Irish. This does not mean that there had been a mixture of the Scotch and Irish blood. The term Scotch-Irish is used to designate the native Scotch who established themselves in Ireland, although the term was not readily accepted by them in the seventeenth century. By the middle of the eighteenth century, however, the term appears in the writings of that time. James Logan referred to them as Scotch-Irish as early as 1730 in a communication to Thomas Penn.¹ Reverend William Becket wrote, "The first settlers in this (Sussex County Delaware) were for the greatest part originally English, some few were of Dutch families, but of late years great number of Irish (who usually call themselves Scotch-Irish) have transplanted themselves and their families from the north Ireland . . ."²

In 1758 a William Douglas, who came from north Ireland, was living in Pennsylvania with his wife Mary and children. After that there is no record of him in Pennsylvania. In 1773 a William Douglas was in Rowan County North Carolina, living on his farm on the east bank of the Catawba River. His will, dated September 1, 1773, mentions his wife Mary and sons David and Solomon. He left his farm to these sons. Solomon was, no doubt, the elder as he was made executor of the will. (I believe this was the same William Douglas, who was in Pennsylvania, but have made no effort to prove it.)

At this time there was much unrest in Pennsylvania and the surrounding territory. France and England were struggling for control of the United States. The French were moving down from Canada. The French and Indian War was being fought. Many of the colonial families were moving South and Southwest to get away from the French. Between 1750 and 1770 there was a large migration from Pennsylvania through Maryland and Virginia, to the Carolinas. Some settled in southern Virginia, but most of them moved on into North Carolina. About the time of this migration, the people who had settled in the eastern part of North Carolina began moving westward. Two trails, one from the east, and one from the north, over which would come the people from Pennsylvania, crossed near Ashboro, North Carolina. Around this intersection many of the people settled and made their homes. In this area, north, south, and west of Ashboro, we find most of the Douglasses of North Carolina. Although there are several branches of the family who seem to have no connection with each other, they all arrived there about the same time. In southern Virginia we find some of the leading Douglas families arriving about this time. They were all, very likely, a part of the general migration from Pennsylvania.

¹Logan Papers, Letter Book III. P. 334

In a receding paragraph we stated that David and Solomon Douglas inherited their father's farm. Evidently Solomon chose to remain on the farm, for the records show the descendants of Solomon Douglas in Rowan County and later in Iradell County, which was formed from Rowan County. Large numbers of them still live there. David Douglas crossed the Catawba River between 1771 and 1776 and made his home on the western side of the the river. In 1771, the people living west of the Catawba River petitioned the Colonial Assembly to lay off a new county, setting forth in their petition, that those living near the foot of the Blue Ridge Mountains had to travel 100 miles to attend court and other business in Salisbury, which was the county seat of Rowan County. No Douglas name appears on this petition, which was not granted. They petitioned again in 1777 and David Douglas signed this petition. This was granted and Burke County was created in that year.

In 1783 David Douglas received a grant for a tract of land on the south fork of the Catawba River on a small stream that was once called Douglas Creek. In 1801, John Douglas of Lincoln County sold to John Brown of Iradell County 100 acres of this land. The deed says it was a part of the tract granted to David Douglas in 1783.¹

John Douglas who came to Mississippi (our forefather) was an orphan. Shortly after the marriage of his parents his father returned to Scotland or Ireland on business. (Family tradition says it was to establish some of the family records). While he was there, he was taken ill suddenly and died. John was born after his father's death, and his mother died shortly after his birth. John was taken by his grandparents and reared as their son (Again family tradition says he was adopted by his grandparents and was known as their child rather than their grandchild). We have no record of the children of David Douglas. If he had any children, who would have been his heirs, the records have been lost. The fact that John Douglas was in possession of the land in 1801 that was granted to David Douglas in 1783 leads us to believe he was the grandson and heir of David Douglas.

As stated above, Burke County was formed in 1777. In 1784 a large part of the territory was taken off Burke County and added to Lincoln County. This included the area where David Douglas lived. For a period of seven years all of the Douglas family living west of the Catawba River were in Burke County. The Burke County records were destroyed by fire and we are deprived of them.

They doubtless contained much information that would shed light on the David Douglas family. His will, the record of his children, if any, the information as how John Douglas came into the possession of his land were all lost. It would have been about this time that John Douglas married, for his son John, Jr. was born between 1780 and 1790, according to the 1820 census of Lawrence County, Mississippi. The record of his marriage was also destroyed, and we do not know whom he married the first time. Note: (When this work was begun we had no record of the life of John Douglas prior to his arrival in Mississippi. By long and diligent research we have been able to establish as authentic all the information given in this and the following chapters except this. We cannot establish proof that John Douglas was the grandson of David Douglas, because of the loss of the records of the seven years they were in Burke County. However, all available information and the dates point to that fact. I am convinced that our family descended from the David Douglas family, yet I have been unable to establish proof thereof).

When the war of the Revolution began in 1776, John Douglas was twelve years of age. On May 20, 1776, he enlisted, as a Drummer, and he served two and one half years. The Drummer was a vital part of the military organization of that day. He not only beat the marches when his unit was on the march or on parade, but he beat the charge as they went into battle, and the retreat, if it became necessary. In the roster of the military units of that time we find that each company had two drummers, called "Drummer boys." They were younger soldiers, usually teenage boys. They held the rank of private and received the same pay as the other soldiers.

In seeking to establish the military record of John Douglas, we ran into many difficulties. The military records are very incomplete, since some of the units were members of the continental army and some were state units, comparable to our National Guard today. There were four men named John Douglas, with no middle name or initial who served with the military forces from North Carolina during the war. One was Lieutenant John Douglas from Richmond County, while the other three were privates from Orange, Rowan, and Surry counties.

The task of determining which of these was our forefather seemed hopeless. However, after long research in the Hall of History and the Military Land Grant Office at Raleigh, North Carolina, the records in the court houses of Orange County at Hillsboro, North Carolina, Rowan County at Salisbury, North Carolina, Surry County at Dobson, North Carolina, and by correspondence with the Adjutant Generals Office, Department of the Army at Washington, D. C., we, by a system of elimination have arrived at the following facts.

Lieutenant John Douglas was eliminated because our forefather was only twelve years of age at enlistment and served as a drummer. Thus he could not have been an officer.

Private John Douglas of Orange County enlisted on May 15, 1776, for two and one half years and was assigned to Captain Williams Company, 4th North Carolina Regiment. He was discharged in 1778.¹ The records in ¹Roster of Soldiers from North Carolina in the American Revolution.

Orange County show he remained in that county throughout his life. He held several offices and places of responsibility. Mrs. Nellie Hill Womack of Du Quoin, Illinois, a great great granddaughter of this John Douglas has a complete family history of this line, which we had the privilege of reading recently. This record shows he never left Orange County, North Carolina, and died there at above ninety years of age.

Private John Douglas of Rowan County enlisted on May 20, 1776, for two and one half years and was assigned to Captain Samuel Reid's Company, 6th North Carolina Regiment.² This company was made up entirely of men from Rowan County. Later he was transferred to the 1st North Carolina Regiment and served with this unit until his discharge late in 1778. In a letter from the office of the Adjutant General of the United States Army, the following is given: "The record shows that one John Douglas served in the Revolutionary War in Captain James Read's Company, 1st North Carolina Regiment, commanded by Colonel Thomas Clark. He enlisted May 20, 1776, for a period of two and one half years. His name appears on the roll of that company dated 8 September, 1778."¹ Colonel Clark's Regiment had one of the most outstanding records of the North Carolina military units. In the list of soldiers who fought in the famous Battle of Guilford Court House was John Douglas of this Regiment.² The date of his enlistment, 20 May, 1776, is the same in the records of the Roster of Soldiers from North Carolina, which is on file in the Hall of History in Raleigh, North Carolina, and the records of the Adjutant General's Office, Washington, D. C. The men who served in the armed forces during the war were eligible for a Military Land Grant of 640 acres of land in Tennessee, which was being settled at that time. A Military Land Warrant Number 566 was issued to John Douglas on 20 April, 1784.³ In the Land Grant Office of North Carolina we find the following: "640 acres of land in Tennessee, on both sides of the east fork of Yellow Creek in Davidson County issued to John Douglas on 15 September, 1889."⁴ This carried the Number 566, which was the grant for the warrent issued in 1784. For some reason he did not go to Tennessee, and the grant was assigned to M. Armstrong.

Private John Douglas of Surry County enlisted 22 April, 1776, for two and one half years and was assigned to Captain Taylor's Company, 1st North Carolina Battalion.¹ The date of his discharge was not shown. Following the war he returned to Surry County where he remained until 1796. Many of his family still live in Surry County. In the Land Grant Office of North Carolina, we find the following record in 1795: "John Guthry, heir of Henry Guthry, assigned 640 acres of land in Sumner County, Tennessee, to John Douglas."² Henry Guthry, a veteran had drawn this land but died before he could go to Tennessee to claim it, and his heir assigned it to John Douglas, another veteran. He went to Tennessee in 1796 and lived there the remainder of his life. Many of his descendants still live in that area.

Thus we find of the four men named John Douglas who fought with the North Carolina troops in the Revolutionary War, only the one from Rowan County could have been our forefather. He could not have been Lieutenant John Douglas of Richmond County, because of his age and rank. The John Douglas from Orange County lived all his life and died in Orange County. The one from Surry County went to Tennessee, where he spent the rest of his life and died there. The one from Rowan County was still living in Lincoln County in 1801, which was a part of Rowan County when he enlisted in 1776. The last record of this John Douglas was when he disposed of his property in 1801, which was granted to David Douglas in 1783. The next record we have of him is a year later when he appears in Georgia on his way to Mississippi.

CHAPTER III

EARLY DAYS IN MISSISSIPPI

In his book Mississippi Baptist Preachers published in 1896, L. S. Foster says in his biography of Elisha Douglass: "John Douglass, father of Elisha Douglass, was a Carolinian by birth. He lived successively in North and South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, and Mississippi. With a colony of Georgians he settled on Fair River, nine miles west of the present Monticello in Lawrence County, while Mississippi was still a territory, and was truly a pioneer in the wilderness."

The original Natchez Territory which roughly included what is today Adams, Amite, Claiborne, Franklin, Jefferson, Wilkerson, and part of Warren Counties, was controlled by the Spanish until 1801, when it became a part of the United States. This was the only land in Mississippi owned by the White people at that time. The Indians controlled the rest of the state. Immediately upon becoming a part of the United States there began a steady migration of white settlers from the east, to the Natchez Territory. Most of these came from eastern Georgia and the Carolinas.

In the preceding chapter it was noted that John Douglas sold his farm in Lincoln County, North Carolina, in November, 1801. This migration of settlers to the Natchez Territory no doubt prompted him to do this. The members of the William Douglas Clan, still living in North Carolina, say he left the state in 1801 and never returned. All trace of him is lost. This is easily understood. He was an orphan, his father dying before his birth, and his mother shortly after he was born. He had no brothers or sisters. With his grandparents gone he had no immediate connection in North Carolina. He was an independent soul, having made his own way since he was twelve years of age when he enlisted in the army. He now launched out into a new era of his life, severing all connections with his past in North Carolina.

Lincoln County North Carolina was, at that time, one of the southernmost counties, extending to the South Carolina line. Gaston County, which now lies south of Lincoln County was not formed until after 1840. From Lincoln County North Carolina across the extreme north western tip of South Carolina was only a short distance into Georgia. We next find John Douglas in Georgia.

On his journey from North Carolina to Mississippi, John Douglas lost his wife by death. Later he married Mrs. Nancy Walden Denman, a young widow, the daughter of William Walden, a member of the colony from Georgia settling in Lawrence County, Mississippi. We have no record of any children by her first marriage. The record in the family Bible of George W. Douglas, son of Ransom Douglas, oldest son of John and Nancy Douglas, states that Ransom was born in Franklin County, Georgia, which is in the extreme northeastern part of Georgia, joining South Carolina on the east and only a short distance across the western tip of South Carolina from Lincoln County, North Carolina. Franklin County is on the direct line of travel, then and today, from North Carolina to the Southwest. In the next paragraph it will be noted that John Douglas and William Walton received passports through the Creek Nation on the same day. I believe this William Walton was the father-in-law of John Douglas and that his name was spelled incorrectly on the passport for we find the names Walden and Walton often used interchangeably in the early records in Georgia, and they came to Mississippi together. There is one family tradition that holds that John Douglas was born in Georgia. The record of his son Ransom being born in Georgia and the fact that he came to Mississippi with a colony from Georgia, perhaps led to this tradition. However, the evidence as stated in the beginning of this chapter, is that he was born in North Carolina.

The Creek Indians, known as the "Creek Nation," controlled a large part of the territory of western Georgia and what is today Alabama and part of Southern Tennessee. Georgia claimed at that time, all the land to the Mississippi River, and by an agreement with the Creek Indians could issue permits, or "pass ports" to white people traveling through the Creek nation. In the records of the pass ports granted at that time we find the following:

Page 469—Wednesday 28th, April 1802

"That pass ports through the Creek Nation to the western territory be prepared for John Douglas and William Walton which were presented and signed."

Journal of the proceedings of the Executive Department of Government during the Administration of his Excellency. John Milledge, Governor of the State of Georgia. 1802 - 1804.

There were only two routes into Mississippi at that time. One was the northern route, across Northern Georgia and into South Tennessee, joining the Natchez Trace which ran from Nashville, Tennessee to Natchez, Mississippi. The other was the southern route across south Georgia and Alabama to Fort Stevens and Fort Stoddard on the Tombigbee River just North of Mobile, Alabama, and thence to Natchez. Because of unrest among the Indians to the south, the group with which John Douglas was traveling chose the northern route. When they arrived at Lookout Mountain, near present Chattanooga, Tennessee, they were warned by friendly Indians that it was not safe to travel further west or south for the Creek Indians were at war. They remained here in south Tennessee for three years until the Indians were at peace. John Douglas bought a farm on top of Lookout Mountain, according to family tradition, and lived here with his family during their stay in Tennessee.

Some members of the family have held to a tradition that John Douglas was born in Tennessee. This record of his having lived on Lookout Mountain, Tennessee perhaps leads to this tradition. However, as stated above, the evidence shows that he was a Carolinian by birth.

When the group with whom John Douglas was traveling left Georgia they had planned to go to Amite County, Mississippi, in the Natchez Territory. In 1805 a treaty was signed whereby the Choctaw Indians sold to the United States about a half million acres of land in South Mississippi. The Choctaw boundary line was drawn from a point a little above Natchez and running east along the northern boundary, of Lawrence and Wayne counties to the Alabama line. Now a vast new territory was opened up for white settlers. When the Georgia Colony arrived at Doak's Store on the Natchez Trace, a short distance above Jackson, the guide that was to meet them and direct them to Amite County failed to appear. However, there was a man there from Lawrence County who told them of the opportunities of this newly acquired territory, and offered to guide them to Lawrence County. The entire group then decided to go to Lawrence County instead of Amite.

At this time there were no roads in Mississippi. Three trails, that had been widened into what were called wagon roads, were the only routes in the state. The Natchez Trace has been mentioned. For protection of the white settlers in Southern Alabama, two forts had been built on the Tombigbee River, Fort Stevens and Fort Stoddard. The people in the Natchez Territory had become interested in a wagon road connecting them with these forts. The first of these roads was the "Three Chopped Way" so named because three blazes were made on the trees marking the road. This road ran from Fort Stoddard across the southern part of the State to Natchez. The other was the Natchez-Fort Stevens Wagon Road, following roughly the route of Highway 84 across Mississippi.

As settlers came into Mississippi, new roads developed. East of Monticello a road branched off from the Natchez-Fort Stevens Road, crossing Pearl River several miles north of Monticello at Smith's Ferry. It was known as the Smith's-Ferry Road. Later when the town of Wesson was established, it was known as the Smith's Ferry and Wesson Road, and is known by that name today. It continued from Wesson, by way of Union Church to Natchez. A trail left the Natchez Trace near where Jackson, Mississippi is today, and followed Pearl River South into Lawrence County. At the crossing of this trail and the Smith's-Ferry Road, there developed a town of Tryus. Before the days of the railroads it grew into a flourishing town located about three miles from where Sontag is today. At one time it had three doctors, a number of stores, a bank, and cotton gin with many people living there. Around this town the early comers to northern Lawrence County settled, spreading out in every direction.

The Natchez-Fort Stevens Road crossed Fair River about six or eight miles west of Tryus. Here John Douglas settled along with his father-in-law William Walden. The house in which he lived, and so far as we know built, still stands, as a part of the home of J. Fleet Maxwell, a direct descendant of John Douglas. It is about one mile from Fair River Baptist Church, in Lincoln County today. The original logs are weather boarded on the outside, and ceiled inside. We have no record of the year he settled here, but he was living in this house when his twin sons, Elisha and and Elijah were born in 1814.

In 1814 the people living in Lawrence County petitioned for a road connecting them with the Natchez Trace as follows: Memorial to Congress by the inhabitants of Mississippi Territory December 14, 1814.

"A Petition for a Post Road through the center of Mississippi to commence at the Choctaw agency at Pearl River, there intersecting the Nashville Route, and thence to Monticello on same river, and then to intersect the Pinkneville Route at Henry G. Nixons which distance is ninety miles." John Douglas signed this petition.

Earlier it was noted that the first wife of John Douglas died in Georgia. We have no record of that marriage which took place in North Carolina. Neither do we have a record of the number of children by his first marriage. We have made no effort to trace that first marriage. The records presented in this work, begins with his second marriage. This much we know, one son by his first marriage, John Douglas, Jr., came to Mississippi with him, and settled in Lawrence County and later in Yazoo County. The 1820 Census, which was the first Census in Mississippi, shows that John Douglas, Sr. was living in Lawrence County and was between 50 and 60 years of age. His wife, Nancy was between 40 and 50 years of age, and they had four sons, Ransom, Jephthah, Joel, and Elisha. (Elijah, the twin brother of Elisha, died at three years of age.) This Census shows John Douglas, Jr. between 30 and 40 years of age, his wife, Sarah, between 30 and 40 years of age. They had two sons and three daughters. William Walden is also listed in this Census, with two sons. No mention is made of his wife. These three are all listed on page 78 of the 1820 Census. The 1830 Census lists John Douglas, Sr. between 60 and 70 years of age, his wife 50 and 60 years of age, and three sons (Jephthah married in 1829). John Douglas, Jr. is listed as being between 40 and 50 years of age, his wife between 40 and 50 years of age, and four sons and four daughters. This Census lists a George Douglas being between 40 and 50 years of age, his wife between 40 and 50 years of age, and seven sons. We have no record of who this George Douglas was. He was not in Lawrence County in 1820, nor is there any record of him later. We do not know where he came from or where he went. He is never mentioned again. There is a family tradition, however, which says that John Douglas, Jr. came to Mississippi with his father and that later another son of John Douglas, Sr., by his first wife, came to Mississippi and lived here for a few years.

In the early days in Mississippi, as in other states, a marriage bond must be signed by the groom and one other person, usually his father. The marriage records in Lawrence County show that George Douglas signed a marriage bond for Anderson Douglas, Green B. Douglas, and G. W. Douglas, Jr. in the 1830's. It is possible that this George Douglas was the son of John Douglas, Sr. His age was about the same as John Douglas, Jr. and he could fit in this tradition.

One of the earliest settlers in Lawrence County was Eli Smith who lived a few miles west of Tryus. He had accumulated a large amount of land in western Lawrence County, which is today a part of Lincoln County. As new settlers arrived he sold or leased this land to them. The land on which John Douglas and William Walden settled on Fair River was owned by Eli Smith. Three of the sons of John and Nancy Douglas married daughters of Eli Smith. Jephthah Douglas married Mary Smith in 1829. Joel Douglas married Priscilla Smith in 1832 and Ransom Douglas married Anna Smith in 1834. Eli Smith never left Lawrence County. He and his wife were buried near their home, which is only a short distance from Sontag, Mississippi.

In 1830 the Choctaw Indians signed the Treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek, by which they sold to the United States all the rest of the land they owned in Mississippi. Those who wished to remain in Mississippi were given enough land for a farm. The others moved to the Indian Territory. This opened up a new territory of Virgin land for the white settlers. In the decade following 1830, Yazoo County developed very rapidly. Many of the Colony of Georgians who had settled in Lawrence County now moved to Yazoo County, among them John Douglas and his sons. There is no record of any Douglas in Lawrence County between 1830 and 1850. The land in this territory was free land. The people could file a claim for a tract of land, move on it and prove the claim. The Douglasses evidently did this, for we find no record of them buying land in Yazoo County in the early 1830's. We do find many records recorded in the Court House of Yazoo County of John Douglas, Sr., John, Jr., Jephthah, Ransom and Joel selling land between 1835 and 1839. They settled between Benton and Vaughn, Mississippi, in the vicinity of Black Jack Baptist Church today. From the records of land sold they accumulated rather extensive holdings.

Nancy Douglas, the wife of John Douglas, died in Yazoo County in August, 1836. The country was thinly populated at that time and cemeteries were not well established. Black Jack Baptist Church, the nearest Church to the territory where they lived, was not established until 1844. Often the family buried their dead on their land near their home, and no permanent markers were placed on the graves. Since most of the family left Yazoo County within a few years, no record has been kept of her resting place. We have made several attempts to locate the place where she was buried, talking with the old settlers spending many hours in all the old cemeteries in this area, and to some private graves on some of the olde rhomesteads, but in vain. There are many unmarked graves in some of the oldest cemeteries in that area, one of which I believe is that of Nancy Douglas. (One of the disappointments of this work is that we have been unable to locate the final resting place of our grandmother, Nancy Douglas, and to put an appropriate marker at her grave).

After the death of his wife, John Douglas was no longer satisfied in Yazoo County, and the old urge to move to new fields again possessed him. In October, 1836, three months after his wife's death, he and his son, Ransom, sold their holdings in Yazoo County. Elisha was not married and still lived with his father. About 15 miles west of Hazlehurst, near the town of Allen, Mississippi, John Douglas and his son, Ransom, bought 900 acres of land and settled. The death of his wife was a severe blow to him, and he never fully recovered from it. He was now above 70 years of age, and broken in health and spirit. On November 9, 1839, three years after the death of his wife, John Douglas died. His sons buried him in the New Providence Baptist Church Cemetery in Copiah County.

Thus ends the story of what we know of the life of our forefather, John Douglas. In many ways he was a most remarkable man. He was uneducated, having been reared as an orphan in the hard frontier life of western North Carolina, where schools were almost unknown, he never had the opportunity to attend school. He made his own way in life, almost from a child. At twelve years of age he took his place beside adult men, and fought, as had his ancestors in Scotland, for the freedom of his country. He was a restless soul, moving about much in his life, always casting his lot in the new untried life of the frontier. He was made of that sterner stuff from whence came the pioneers of our country. Without men of his courage, vision, and fortitude, who endured the hardships, conquered the wilderness, and laid the foundation, we would not have our great country today.

We could not close this without a word of tribute to Nancy Walden Douglas who marched with her husband, matching his endurance, step by step in the life of the frontier. In our research, we have discovered, here and there, bits of evidence that reveals the character of this remarkable woman, our grandmother. In a log house, or an ox wagon she bore and reared her children, making a home for them under conditions her daughters today would find impossible. She was a good woman, with profound convictions on the basic issues of life, on which she built the home life of her family. She had a deep abiding faith in God and instilled this into her children, the results of which can be seen to this day in the sixth and seventh generation. Though her mortal remains lie buried in an unmarked grave in Yazoo County, Mississippi, she still lives in the lives of the hundreds of her children's children.

CHAPTER IV

THE SECOND GENERATION

When John Douglas moved from Yazoo County to Covich County in 1836, as was noted in the last chapter, three of his sons remained in Yazoo County. As far as we are able to determine John Douglas, Jr. remained there until his death. There are many records of land and property transfers by John and Sarah Douglas for thirty years after his father's departure. The last record we find of these transactions is that they sold to Isiah Bardwell the land mentioned earlier, thirteen acres of which was willed to Joel Douglas. This took place in 1868. This was evidently a part of the home of John Douglas, Sr. which was willed to his sons, and John, Jr. had gotten possession of a portion of Joel Douglas' share. He and his wife were above seventy years at this time and we have no further record of him.

As was stated in the previous chapter, John Douglas, Jr. had four sons and four daughters according to the 1830 Census. In addition to these children a three year old daughter was stolen by the Indians, and was never recovered. The family never knew whether the child died, was killed or reared as an Indian.

The marriage records in Lawrence County show that between 1828 and 1840 John Douglas, Jr. signed marriage bonds for two of his sons and four of his daughters as follows: Martha, who married James M. Stanfil in 1828; Mary, who married James R. Tankersby in 1828; Allsey, who married Elizabeth Moore in 1836; Cinthea, who married James Lambert in 1837; Sarah, who married John Lambert in 1840; and Andrew, who married Elizabeth Brown in 1840. We do not know where they made their homes but family tradition says they moved into South Mississippi and North Louisiana. There are a number of Douglasses in North Louisiana, some around Covington and some in Bogalusa, who say that they are related to our family, perhaps through the John Douglas, Jr. line. One of these, George Douglas from Bogalusa attends our family reunion each year. As stated earlier, we have made no effort to trace this family line, but have dealt only with the descendants of John and Nancy Douglas. Perhaps at a later time we shall do some work here.

At the death of John Douglas, Ransom, with whom he had made his home since his wife's death, bought the interests of his brothers in the 900 acre farm in Covich County and reared his large family there. He was a very successful farmer and extended his holdings until he had one of the largest and most productive farms in that area. As his children grew up and married, they moved away from this community and entered various fields of activities. Only one of his sons, Isaac remained a farmer. He bought the farm from his brothers and sisters and reared his family there. They, in turn, moved elsewhere. We find none of the family living in that vicinity today. The farm has become a part of a vast timber reservation, and there is no trace of the homestead remaining. This family is widely scattered in all parts of the United States. More of the descendants of Ransom Douglas have gone into the business world than any other branch of the family. There have been, and are today, many successful businessmen from this family in all parts of the country from New York to California. There have been many professional men and women among them, especially in the field of medicine. This family has produced more doctors than any other branch of the family. Three of his sons, George, Albert, and Robert served the Confederacy during the War Between the States. Unlike his brothers, who each lost one or more of their sons, his sons all survived.

Jeptha, the second son of John and Nancy Douglas remained in Yazoo County until his death. One family tradition says he later moved to Holmes County and lived near Lexington for a period of time. We have not tried to confirm this. At the time of his death he was living in Yazoo City. Both he and his wife are buried there. Apparently he was the first of the family to move from Lawrence to Yazoo County. The earliest record we find of the family in Yazoo County is that Jeptha Douglas entered land from the U.S. Government—Patented on 1/4/1833 as follows: SE $\frac{1}{4}$ of SE $\frac{1}{4}$ Section 26 Township 11 Rangs 1 E. He sold this land to Daniel W. Hendricks on February 11, 1834. It is now owned by Norwood Nichols, Jr. We find more records of land transfers, buying and selling, by Jeptha Douglas in Yazoo County than all the others combined. He seemed to have been very keen and alert in his business affairs.

The information on this family is very limited and the record brief. He had the smallest family and the smallest number of descendants of the four brothers. Most of the information that we have comes from his grandson, Thomas N. Douglas, now living at Pineville, Louisiana. After his death his wife remained in Yazoo City with her two sons, who were small boys at the time. She did not survive her husband long, and at her death her sons, James and Thomas, went to Lawrence County and lived with their mother's family until they were old enough to provide for themselves. Thomas Douglas lived most of his adult life in Lincoln County. He was married several times but had no children. James Douglas lived in Lincoln and Covich Counties. He was married twice, surviving both wives and died at the home of his daughter in McComb. He is buried at Pleasant Hill Church Cemetery near Union Church. His descendants are widely scattered, none of them living near where James Douglas reared his family.

Joel Douglas remained in Yazoo County until 1839, the year of his father's death. Selling his home there, he moved to Covich County and bought a farm adjoining his brother Ransom, where he lived for more than ten years. Sometime after 1850, (he was living in Covich County when the 1850 Census was taken) he sold his farm to his brother, Ransom, and returned to Lawrence County, settling near the home of his wife's parents. His farm included the site of the present town of Sontag. Here he remained the rest of his life and reared his large family. Three of his sons were in service in the War Between the States, two of them giving their lives for the Confederacy. He has the largest number of descendants of any of the four sons of John and Nancy Douglas.

He was a devout man, reading his Bible every day. This writer has in his possession, at this time, the family Bible of Joel Douglas, and the leaves throughout the Bible are covered with yellow splotches. As he would sit on the front porch and read, he would be chewing tobacco, and, as he would spit, the leaves were spattered with tobacco juice. Whatever our opinion of this may be, here is mute evidence that he was an avid reader of his Bible. The family record in this Bible goes a generation further back than any other record we have been able to find. It is here that we find recorded the date of the birth of John and Nancy Douglas.

More of his descendants have remained near his home than any of the other families. We find a large number of them living in Lawrence County today. Though many of them have gone into various occupations and professions, more of his family have remained on the land than any of the other branches of the family. There are perhaps more farmers, cattlemen, and those who work with timber among them than all the other families combined. He seemed to have instilled into his family a love for the land, and one of the oldest and most honorable of all the professions, that of tilling the soil and providing food for humanity's hunger. This family has had more to go into the profession of teaching than any other profession. In fact, it has, perhaps, produced more teachers than any other branch of the Douglas family.

Twins, Elisha and Elijah, were born June 9, 1814, to John and Nancy Douglas. Elijah died at three years of age. Elisha Douglas was one of the most remarkable men that the Douglas family has produced. He was a delicate child, and never a strong man, being in ill health all of his life. When he was seven years old he was sent to school for a few months, but ill health caused him to make slow progress. Because of the sparse population, there was a school only once in four or five years. When he was fourteen years old he attended a six month's school, learned to read and write and began to study arithmetic. Again at the age of nineteen he attended a three months' school which closed his school opportunities. His health grew worse until he became almost an invalid for several years. He secured what books he could buy or borrow and set out to educate himself. He had a desire for learning that became almost a passion with him. He thoroughly mastered every book he could get, in whatever field it might be. He studied books on medicine, law, bookkeeping, and philosophy. He practiced writing until he could write one of the most beautiful hands it has been our privilege to read. His will, recorded in the Court House of Lawrence County, is a thing of beauty. This study continued throughout his life. In the later years, after plowing all day, his horse being too tired to travel, he would walk four or five miles at night to borrow a book he had heard about, return home and spend a large part of the night devouring the book. Thus, by sheer determination, with a burning desire for learning, he became one of the best educated men of his day, being well versed in almost every field of learning.

He moved, with his father, from Yazoo County to Copiah County, and the following year married Miss Mary Davis, daughter of Zaborn Davis of Copiah County. Again his health failed, and for many years he struggled with disease and poverty. His church, New Providence, licensed him to preach in 1852 and ordained him in 1853. His first pastorate was Little Bahala Church in Lincoln County. In 1858, he moved from Copiah County to Lawrence County, buying a farm near his brother, Joel, where he lived the rest of his life. He was called as pastor of Shiloh Church shortly after moving to Lawrence County and served this church as its pastor for thirty years. For fifty years he preached to small and struggling churches in Lawrence, Lincoln, and Copiah Counties. During a large part of his ministry, especially during and after the Civil War, when the people were poverty stricken, he received very little salary as a pastor; in some instances, the church paid him nothing for a whole year. He had to depend upon his farm for most of the support of his large family. He worked on his farm all the week, and rode horseback and often walked many miles to preach on Saturday and Sunday, and then study far into the night each night. He was one of the pioneer preachers of South Mississippi, and his work was largely missionary work throughout his life.

During the Civil War, with two of his sons in service one of whom gave his life, and the other was wounded several times, he gave much of his time in service to the soldiers. In addition to serving his churches and operating his farm, he spent much of his time in the camps. From his reading of medicine, he was able to assist the doctors with the sick and wounded, at the same time, somewhat as a chaplain, ministering to their spiritual needs. He was present in the Army Hospital at Jackson when his nephew, Andrew Douglas, died. I have, in my possession, three passports which were granted to Elisha Douglas to go through the Federal lines to preach in revival meetings during the war. His will and devotion to service to people, enabled him to do this, despite the fact that he was never a strong man physically and was in ill health most of his life.

As his children grew up and married, they moved into Lincoln and Copiah Counties and reared their children there. None of his descendants are living in Lawrence County. More of them live in Lincoln County today than any other place. They, like the members of the other branches of the family, are widely scattered. This family has produced more ministers than any other branch of the Douglas Family. It has produced the only lawyers, according to our best knowledge, of the entire family. However, there are three in law school at present, from other branches of the family. There have been many teachers among them.

 961 Alfred L. Boyd, Jr.
- e. Robert Judson Douglas, son of Ransom and Frances Douglas, married first, Fannie Napier; and second, Mrs. Annie Harrison. Early in life he went west, living for a period of time in Texas and Oklahoma Territory. Returning to Mississippi, he went into business, operating a store and livery stable in Mt. Olive, Mississippi. He taught school for a time, and purchasing a farm near his father he has remained here the rest of his life. He had a leading part in establishing the town of Sontag, dividing up a part of his farm into lots, and inducing businessmen to come there. He has been a great help to the writer of this record, in helping establish some family lines, and recalling many incidents in their past history. He has a good mind, which is still clear and alert in his late 80's, and is well read in world affairs. He is an individualist; perhaps some would classify him as a "Free Thinker," but we have found him one of the most interesting men in the family, and have spent many pleasant hours in conversation with him. Their children:
- 962 Winnie Douglas
- (a) Winnie Douglas, daughter of Robert Judson and Fannie Douglas, married _____ Graff. Their children:

1438	Martha E. Douglas	b. October 23,	1883

A. Elijah Putnam Douglas, son of Elisha and Navy Douglas, married Elizabeth Davis. He was a Baptist Minister, living on his farm in Lincoln County near Wesson, Mississippi. For two years following his 21st birthday, he taught school and read medicine, planning to become a doctor. When the Civil War began, in 1861, he enlisted and went with his regiment, the Twelfth Mississippi, to Virginia, serving with Lee's Army throughout the War, and took part in nearly every engagement in which they participated. He was wounded several times, once on Look Out Mountain in the "Battle Above the Clouds," and at the Battle of Fort Gregg, just a few days before the surrender, he received a wound which was almost fatal. Following the war, he taught school for many years. His teaching, together with his farm, largely supported his family, while he preached to new and struggling churches until his death in 1898. His work, like that of his father, was largely missionary work. He took a leading part in the battle to abolish the saloons from Mississippi, and felt so strongly the cause of temperance, that he voted the prohibition party for many years prior to his death. He lived in the period of debates, between the leaders of church groups, on their beliefs. The Clarke-Douglas Debate, on "What is a New Testament Church?" which was published in book form attracted wide spread attention at that time. He died at his home in Lincoln County and is buried in the Davis Family Cemetery, near his home. Their children:
